

That notebook has become the "No Why" book. Questions are grouped on topical pages, followed by a separate page for each answerer. Typical:

1. How would you design a house?
2. What would the kitchen be like?
3. How would you sleep?
4. What about bathing?
5. ... an shitters?
6. What laws should there be about houses and construction?
7. What laws should there not be?
8. What would be in the backyard?
9. How would the doors be?

etc

1. How would you teach your children?

etc

1. What kind of family do (would) you have?

etc

1. What are your economic ethics?

My answers are fairly pedestrian. God's answers are like:

"Why use money?" "Why have a ~~what~~ family?"
"Why teach em anything?" "Why do I need any doors at all?" "Why take a shit?"
"Why have any govt?" Oh, so you're planning to build a house, are you? Don't you know

What I've decided to do is work out an individual lifestyle — i.e. single; cheap, flexible, resourceful — economically, and spend the rest of the time doodling,
playing, reading, volunteering, swimming, etc.
Penny is very very happy ~~and~~ married. I'm glad! What to do about sex living in a tree? I don't know. I don't know that it's all that important, or that where how you live has much to do with it
at its best: it must be rather secondary.
There's whoring.

It might not be as simple as you think to teach children? Where are you planning to get the children anyway?
He is the only other answerer so far
Australia looks good.

I used to play at philosophy and wrote and wrote, now I am really a philosopher! I spend all my philosophy tearing my other philosophy to pieces! Well, recycling it.
