

Today in the parking lot I was visited by a butterfly (twice) and one lady bug (beetle). 3/19/1976

The place in our conversation where you noted a difference between a theory of economics that starts from scratch, and one that starts from existing inequalities I do not well understand. Why should it make any difference? Yet, intuitively it seems like there are types of systems and functions where it does make a difference in an interesting way.

Some more refinements to "the world fair wage" - Hugh: "You can't just take a mathematical average and call that fair - what's so fair about that?"

Mike: You're right! It has to be proportional to a persons average metabolic rate and relative body weight.

I never did get your paper "Intention and Responsibility" from Fred, and I would still like to see it.

I'd also like to go over the papers you sent in the mail with you. I wonder if my abstract impression of the gist of it "Law is better than nothing," is accurate

This is a lined letter please put it in an envelope Mary.
