

Dear Dave,

I'm sending you my copy of a paper by the honorable philosopher of Boston Pat Grim. I'm not sure I understand the direction of the punch, and I thought you might be interested and able to clarify matters a little if you have time to read it. I do like the line of the introduction. If you have any bagel-shaped buoys, throw them out in that area between the introduction and the body of the work (i.e. what is the significance of these various issues regarding counterfactuals?) please. I hope to resume my understanding of this paper someday. Maybe I'll pick it up again in the Springtime if I hitchhike up to Berkeley as I would like to then. Also, you should soon be receiving a folder of some correspondence regarding 'educational architectures', 'Independent study', etc. You expressed an interest at Christmastime and so on and so forth.

Ah, Berkeley in Spring — (is still a ways away). Good luck on your graduate schools. Mark Twain wrote an interesting critique of Love Triumphant.

Have you ever seen a red hatted junior birdman?

your friend,

Mike F.

P.S. I'd send you a copy of this paper, but I know of no convenient Xerox machine around here, though
