

Dear Dick, 2/27/73

Fresh oranges are really delicious and can provide energy when spirits are low. I receive so many letters, so I've been calling people here and there.

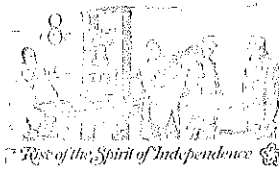

As soon as I get a new batch of copy from you, I'm going to try to engage an architectural consultant. I may find a nearby Xerox soon - the weather is warming daily and the melting snows pouring off a flood.

I think begin writing to bulk mail towards a construction.

it should be organized like a used car lot. The closest design (architectural) metaphor would be a lunar module, which embodies, carries, and the design of which fits a variety of experiments and purposes. What we may do is like assemble a do-it-yourself political kit. There may be many overlapping phases of presentation, logics of pep-talk and commerce, surveys, hard (historical) sells and organizational logistics proposals. What shall we call our snippets, etc. "I.S. Continuity, I" or "what's happening, Ma, I" wouldn't it be fun to find a real document of a letter sent out for a space craft experiment proposal and change the words just a little for similar purpose? Love, Mike

Dear Dick, No No No the world of used car lots, space probes and broadcast salesmanship already exists. You and I have met in the hallway of the AM school pushing brooms, and between us we have some cutout scraps and a few torn pages maybe and a burnt out light bulb. If God is love, does love dwell in rules and customs, structures and organizations? Our difficulty seems to be that we are in a situation which requires proposals; yet what sort of proposals can we, two graduates out in the world, make? Maybe the simplest convergence is that the knowledge and what continues to exist in the you or I, rests in your Independent Study is and quiet like a virgin. encouragement? Having "ture" enough. Maybe any proposal. So I am thinking our bulk mail could be an assortment of questions, perhaps just a complete list of the questions which rest between you and I in our discussion until here or so.

P.S. Then again, questions can be asked from all sorts of "standpoints," or implicit situations. What is the first thing that a used vehicle dealer says to you? - "May I help you?" "What sort of a vehicle are you looking for?" "Would you like a canoe?" etc. Perhaps we have stumbled into yet another design criteria. So we have #1 Coherence = the stacking up in a field of independently stable I-Thou relationships is without interference #2 Essential Asymmetry = the meaning of a question or action does not depend upon an answer or response and #3 questions constitute proposals, science is Christ or same such.
